In order to enhance campus diversity, the Frederick Douglass Scholars Program at Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania offers teaching and scholarship opportunities for recent graduates of terminal degree programs and graduate students entering the final stages of terminal degree programs (ABD). The program is intended for individuals who are seeking academic experiences to help them further develop the skills needed to be successful university faculty members and scholars.

Participants in the program typically teach full time (negotiable) and conduct scholarly research during an agreed upon combination of Summer, Fall, and Spring sessions. Scholars will be compensated as temporary faculty, according to the university's collective bargaining agreement, will be mentored by senior faculty members and are expected to participate in campus activities. Scholars may also be requested to work with the Frederick Douglass Institute to develop/implement multicultural programing on campus.

Minimum requirements

- Post Master's degree (ABD or equivalent)
- Academic background in one of the disciplines taught at Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania
- Completed application documents (as referred to above) sent electronically to gradschool@bloomu.edu

Recent Frederick Douglass Teaching Scholars were Jennice Lusk (left) sociology, and Meredith Holloday, philosophy.
The Frederick Douglass Teaching Scholars Program

In order to enhance campus diversity, the Frederick Douglass Scholars Program at Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania offers teaching and scholarship opportunities for recent graduates of terminal degree programs and graduate students entering the final stages of terminal degree programs (ABD). The program is intended for individuals who are seeking academic experiences to help them further develop the skills needed to be successful university faculty members and scholars.

Participants in the program typically teach full time (negotiable) and conduct scholarly research during an agreed upon combination of Summer, Fall, and Spring sessions. Scholars will be compensated as temporary faculty, according to the university’s collective bargaining agreement, will be mentored by senior faculty members and are expected to participate in campus activities. Scholars may also be requested to work with the Frederick Douglass Institute to develop/implement multicultural programing on campus.

Minimum requirements

- Post Master’s degree (ABD or equivalent)
- Academic background in one of the disciplines taught at Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania
- Completed application documents (as referred to above) sent electronically to gradschool@bloomu.edu
How to Apply

Application Documents

- A Curriculum Vitae
- A letter of qualification and interest
- An unofficial copy of graduation transcripts
- A letter from your major or dissertation advisor in support of your application
- Letters from at least two additional references regarding your experience and abilities

Please send all application materials listed above (the recommendation letters may come directly from the source) electronically to gradschool@bloomu.edu.

Although applications are accepted at any time, the university’s decision for fall placements are typically made by mid-April.

For more information, call 570-389-4015. www.bloomu.edu/frederick_douglass/scholars
The following disciplines have been identified for the recruitment of Frederick Douglass Teaching Scholars for the 2012-2013 academic year.

Liberal Arts

Communication Studies
- Small Group Communication
- Intercultural Communication
- Strategic Communication
- Crisis Communication

History
- Africa
- Southern and Central Asia
- Pacific Oceanic Realm (other than Japan)

Language and Cultures
- Black Hispanic Culture

Music, Theater and Dance
- Ethno Musicology
- Music Therapy for people with disabilities

Philosophy
- Religious Studies
- Applied Ethics (Business and Medical)

Sociology, Social Work and Criminal Justice
- Any area of expertise

Business

- Marketing
- Finance and Legal Studies
- Management

Education

- Special Education — Working with Autistic Children
- Special Education — Assessment of Autistic Children
- Any other area of expertise in Special Education

Science and Technology

- Electronics Specialist
- Physical Science
- Biochemistry
- Mathematics
- Nursing
- Audiology
- Exercise Science
ABOUT BLOOMSBURG UNIVERSITY — Building on a rich history of academic excellence as one of 14 public universities in the Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education, Bloomsburg University prepares and inspires students to become dynamic and confident leaders. More than 10,000 students are enrolled in 54 undergraduate and 20 graduate programs.

Location

Bloomsburg University is one mile south of exit 236, Interstate 80, in north-central Pennsylvania.

Travel Times
Baltimore, MD: 3 hours
Boston, MA: 6.5 hours
Buffalo, NY: 4.25 hours
Harrisburg, PA: 1.5 Hours
New York City, NY: 3 hours
Philadelphia, PA: 2.5 hours
Pittsburg, PA: 4 hours
Washington DC: 4 hours
Phoenix, AZ: 34 hours
In order to enhance campus diversity, the Frederick Douglass Scholars Program at Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania offers teaching and scholarship opportunities for recent graduates of terminal degree programs and graduate students entering the final stages of terminal degree programs (ABD). The program is intended for individuals who are seeking academic experiences to help them further develop the skills needed to be successful university faculty members and scholars.

Participants in the program typically teach full time (negotiable) and conduct scholarly research during an agreed upon combination of Summer, Fall, and Spring sessions. Scholars will be compensated as temporary faculty, according to the university's collective bargaining agreement, will be mentored by senior faculty members and are expected to participate in campus activities. Scholars may also be requested to work with the Frederick Douglass Institute to develop/implement multicultural programming on campus.

Minimum requirements:
- Post Master's degree (ABD or equivalent)
- Academic background in one of the disciplines taught at Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania
- Completed application documents (as referred to above) sent electronically to gradschool@bloomu.edu

Recent Frederick Douglass Teaching Scholars were Jennice Lusk (left) sociology, and Meredith Holloday, philosophy.